

Mother's Day

SCRIPT:

Julia: Hey, it's Mother's Day today.

Joey: Really? What do we do on Mother's Day?

Julia: We celebrate because our mother's gave birth to us.

Joey: I thought we did that on Labor Day.

Julia: I think that's something different.

Joey: Well, what are we supposed to do on Mother's Day?

Julia: We are supposed to do things that will make our mother happy like cook the meals, clean up, buy her things, and look after her.

Joey: Wow. That's a lot of work. I don't know if I could do all that. Besides, it's not fair.

Julia: What's not fair?

Joey: Well, there's a Mother's Day during the year but no kid's day. I think we should have a special day just for kids.

Julia: And what would the mothers do for kid's day?

Joey: The same thing that we do for them on Mother's Day. They would have to cook the meals, clean up, buy things for us, and look after us.

Julia: (gives "the look") Joey.

Joey: What?

Julia: Think about it Joey.

Joey: What?

Julia: (loudly) Our mothers do that for us every day.

Joey: Yea, you're right. So every day is kid's day.

Julia: Except for today. We get 364 days a year and our mothers get only one.

Joey: Whoa. We better make this day special. Last year I forgot to buy her something and she told me that I was the best present she could have.

Julia: My dad says he always gets her something that she can return.

Joey: I don't think that I'm returnable. I think she lost the receipt.

Julia: Yeah, my mom is always losing things, like receipts. And her glasses. And her mind, Dad says.

Joey: I think I make my mom lose things she had. She looks at me when I'm bad and says, "I've had it. I've lost it."

Julia: What's "it?"

Joey: I don't know. But apparently it's really important.

Julia: Well, I'm going to go home and plan what to do for Mother's Day.

Joey: Yeah. Me too.

(Both turn to audience)

Julia: And to all the mothers in the audience,

Joey: We want to say thanks for all you do!

Julia: Thanks for making us feel special.

Joey: We think you're pretty special, too.

Julia and Joey: We love you! (Both blow a kiss into the audience.)
